Everyone's childhood favorite was bound to grow up sometime! We've taken the classic pitted black olive and turned it up a notch by using a Greek Halkidiki varietal that's been hand-harvested and gently cured. (Don't worry, you can still put them on your fingers!) Here's a fun fact: all olives start out green, even these deep black ones. The oxidation curing process that turns olives black was developed in California in the late 1800's and remains a staple of California cuisine.
